

Joan E. Talbert is Senior Research Scholar and Co-director of the Center for Research on the Context of Teaching (CRC, founded in 1987) in Stanford University's School of Education. She has a PhD in Sociology from the University of Washington and conducts research on teacher professional communities and careers, school organization and change, embedded contexts of teaching, and district system reform. Over the past fifteen years, she and her CRC colleagues have documented the theories, practices, and outcomes of eight foundation-sponsored initiatives focused on developing professional capacity in school systems. Dr. Talbert's recent books and articles include Building School-based Teacher Learning Communities in Schools: Professional Strategies to Improve Student Achievement, (with Milbrey W. McLaughlin: Teachers College Press, 2006); Professional Communities and the Work of High School Teaching (with Milbrey W. McLaughlin; University of Chicago Press, 2001); Teaching for Understanding: Challenges to Practice, Research, and Policy (Ed. with David K. Cohen and Milbrey W. McLaughlin; Jossey-Bass, 1993); "Conceptions of evidence use in school districts: Mapping the terrain" (with C. E. Coburn in American Journal of Education, 2006); "Professionalism and politics in high school teaching reform" (Journal of Educational Change, 2003); and "Reforming Districts" (with M. McLaughlin), Center for the Study of Teaching and Policy, 2003.
